

Satellite Radio is not an option I choose in competition with AM and FM radio. I haven't listened to the radio for over 20 years because it is worthless, and anyone who thinks the local radio content is actually created locally is kidding themselves, just ask Clear Channel.

Our government needs to quit assisting poor quality, and that applies to broadcast information and entertainment, as well as the recording industry, and the airline industry, all of which are in trouble because they provide a bad product or bad service.

People will continue to find our way to the better products and services like XM Satellite Radio. I insist that the FCC stop stifling ingenuity, and maybe the NAB will be forced to address quality of what they broadcast. XM provides me with constant traffic updates in my local area when I need it, not when the NAB thinks I might be driving and willing to listen to assorted on air personalities and commercials while I wait for the traffic report. In Los Angeles, it is the only service that can deliver consistently, and I rely on it.
